

4th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry.

The Roster.

This Roster is intended to keep in touch one with another. The home address of every member of the regiment makes the little booklet a thing of value. When we are mustered out of the service and become disbanded, we can take our Roster and say of a truth we are thus banded. Should we board the car to make a sally through the State, the Roster, by all means, should be taken, as a directory in search of old army friends. After a few years of separation it will be a matter of surprise how closely members of the regiment are bound together, even though now they may not be acquainted. The fact that there is a member of the "Old Fourth" in our town or neighborhood—no matter who he is or what he is—will at once institute a search for him and, even should there be no personal recognition, there would at least be a friendly meeting and acquaintance begun. Every man in the regiment should have a Roster.

Colonel Horace M. Seaman.

Col. Horace M. Seaman, son of Hon. Galen B. Seaman, is quite a young man of imposing address, a lawyer of fine practice. Both the father and son are men of distinction. The Colonel was born and reared in Milwaukee, received instruction there in the public schools and is now a successful practitioner of the law in his native city. He was born in 1864—has been connected for the last fourteen years with the National
